Vuestro pecho se enciende en ardor
Y marchemos las manos unidas

En sus huellas florezca la luz.
Todo alumno entronice en su vida
Esta sola palabra ¡verdad!

Sencillez el crisol de sus obras
Y el camino de su integridad.

Del deber en el yunque sagrado
El trabajo también redentor
Pueda hacer nuestra vida fecunda
Para darla y servir la hizo Dios

Tras las huellas que suben al templo
Coloquemos del alma una flor,
Ella es guía, modelo y ejemplo
Y tras ella la Presentación.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PROBLEM

The following situations were found through the general observations made in the English classes on each of the six Educatives Institutions of the Department of Caldas used in this study.

Instituto Técnico Francisco José de Caldas

One of the most frequent problems that was noticed, has to be with the use of the native language -Spanish (L1) - in the English classroom. This problem might be happening, due to the fact that most of the homeroom teachers in Elementary Schools do not have a formal training in English and they do not teach it in an efficient way. For this reason the students do not have the possibility to communicate with classmates using the second language and to participating orally in English class.

SEmenor

According to the observations, it was found that students need more dynamic learning activities, where they can use English in other subjects to connect the content the other areas. Besides, students do not use frequently English. This may be owing to teachers’ lack of motivation for using English in their classes; sometimes it happens because students do not like to have their classes being taught in English or teachers do not feel confident to speak in English.

Liceo Infantil Niños 2000

The following situations were found through the general observations in Fifth and third grades English classes:
The English teaching is not formally established in the institution; thus, teachers do not use appropriate second language acquisition strategies. As a result of the below, students do not acquire appropriate English skills. The observations showed that teachers, in the primary section, implement strategies that do not promote the communicative competence in the students. It was evident that a high percentage of the class was spoken in the native tongue –Spanish-. Furthermore, the teacher was constantly using methodologies that do not develop students’ communicative skills, such as speaking, writing, and listening. Additionally, these practices and processes in class do not foster an English interactive environment, taking into account that this is the only place where most of the students have contact with this language.

Liceo Aprender

At Liceo Aprender Institution, English classes have an hourly course of five hours per week. English is one of the areas with a large number of hours in the curriculum development, which proves that it is considered as one of the most important subjects in the Institution.

Through the general and focused observations it was observed that during 90% of the English class the teacher used his native tongue to give explanations, instructions, etc. This situation has a big influence in the students’ acquisition of better communicative competencies.

Institución Educativa La Presentación

Since the Colombia bilingual program has not been implemented yet in all public institutions, there are neither sufficient resources nor qualified personnel to reach a full bilingual education. On account of this, students are not motivated.

Trough general and focalized observations from first grade to fifth grade, there have been detected some issues are part of the English class. First of all, in the students’ context, English is not frequently used, since their parents do not have a good English level and their teachers only use this Language in the 40% of the class. Students do not use English in their class activities; moreover, they do not interact by using the language in the other contexts e.g. the playground, the corridors and the school cafeteria.

Another concern has to be with the fact that a lot of students fail English subject. Students’ lack of interest in learning English. Likewise, it is so difficult for them to practice what they are taught in class. As a result of these issues, they get a high frustration level and they do not want to express what they have learned in class.

Instituto Universitario de Caldas

The observations were made at Instituto Universitario de Caldas, in the 1st, 2nd, 4th and 5th grades. Through general and targeted observations the following is found:

The students do not feel motivate to learn English, they do not understand when the teacher speaks in English and the English classes had little impact on the students’ learning process, seeing that the implemented strategies in the classroom do not fulfill students’ needs, interest and learning styles. In addition, the instructions are either given all time in Spanish or constantly translated from Spanish into English. When English language is used, it does not serve meaningful communicative purposes.

Conclusion: Analyzing the observations done in each Educational Institutions, there are two common problematic situations that will be intervened in the present study.

1. Teacher frequently use their native language in the English classes, they translating from English to Spanish, and using Spanish to teach English.

2. Students do not use and communicate during the classes in English.

THE PROBLEM

Common Problems Related to Students’ Performance inside the English Classroom that Have Been Identified at Six Educative Institutions of Caldas Department
TAXONOMY

According to registrations that were done in the field diary and to focalized observations made in elementary school, there were noticed some problems, which are described below, as well as the particularities in the six institutions.

Instituto Técnico Francisco José de Caldas Superior de Caldas

TEACHERS:

Vocabulary: The vocabulary used in the English class by the teachers is appropriate for children. When they teach a specific topic, they use simple words and expressions. However, when students ask something, teachers explain it using their native tongue.

Methodology: Teachers start their classes with greetings in English; for the development of the classes, they use flash cards, songs and interactive videos. Students have to write and draw in their notebooks according to teachers’ instructions.
Fluency: Teachers do not use the language in a good amount because the students do not understand them. Instructions are given in Spanish.

Grammar: Students do not properly read English words. In addition, the teachers translate each word into Spanish when they are writing.

Time: Most of the time the English class is talked in Spanish. Students only have contact with the language when they sing and repeat the vocabulary from videos.

Body language: Teachers use in a 40% their corporal expression since the students do not understand them, otherwise they translate the words.

STUDENTS

Students output: There is a low level of this ability. Students do not use the second language to express their opinions or to communicate with each other.

Interference of L1: As the teachers’ explanations are in Spanish, the students ask questions in L1 too. When they try to speak or read in English, they do not know how to pronounce correctly considering that they do not practice enough orally, Low acquisition of English: The concepts that students acquire are learned momentary. Sometimes they do not learn in a meaningful way and this English concepts are not retained on their minds.

English curriculum no cross: The institution curriculum does not allow that students to improve their knowledge. In addition, English is only used during the class, Motivation: Students do not feel motivated to learn English, given that they do not recognize the importance of speaking another language. Besides, the activities do not promote their interest in participating in class.

Intimidation inhibition: Students feel intimidated and refrain from speaking, considering that they do not know how to use the language to make a question or express any opinion and their L1 interference a lot on their pronunciation.
SEMENOR

TEACHERS

Vocabulary: The vocabulary that teachers use in classes is not enough in terms of time since that is the only moment in which they can use it. This vocabulary must be used in all classes, in order to fulfill a policy of bilingualism at school. Additionally, it is translated into Spanish.

Fluency: The use of Spanish in class is common. Instructions and expressions are given in Spanish, consequently, their speech is low. The English teaching as foreign language in the school is intended to prepare senior students for external evaluations carried out in the country.

Grammar: Teachers feel more confident in terms of grammar, since they simply teach a structure to be drilled by students.

Methodology: English teachers do not use learning strategies that strengthen the communicative competence. They keep on using traditional approaches that hamper the development of this skill, as well as communicative language skills (reading, writing, listening and speaking) resulting this in low student academic scores.

Time: Students only have the opportunity to be exposed to the language when reading instructions from a worksheet designed by the teacher. Besides, the single repetitions of phrases do not mean that the students are aware of what it really means.

Body Language: Nonverbal language is more common in the EFL class, and teachers make use of it to be understood. Moreover, it reduces students’ anxiety and reduce disruptive behavior.

STUDENTS

Students output: Students do not understand what the teacher says in English, they do not make use of the speaking ability in class. The participation on the activities is not good as well as the understanding the class.
Interference of L1: Students native tongue is a marked influence in the learning of EFL. They built their own rules of language based on the ones from their L1, which makes the learning of another language to be in a mental conflict and ends up making students not knowing what is right.

Intimidation, inhibition: Many factors play an important role in the students’ learning process. Some of these are they feeling inhibited or intimidated at when talking in English during class. These elements may have an impact on their low knowledge acquisition of the language, the students’ mood and the characteristics of the personality or insecurities.

Low acquisition of English: English has been employed in class before, but not in a wide way, so the students have not acquire enough language abilities. On this issue, there are many factors involved, such as traditional teachers, little practice at home, use of Spanish in class and so on, which causes a merge with English.

English curriculum no cross: Mainstreaming the English language is vital in schools. It requires all teachers throughout the school to be immersed in bilingualism and to involve topics in English in other subjects to get students’ ears used to it and thus, encourage them speaking.

Liceo Infantil Niños 2000

TEACHERS

Vocabulary: Teachers teaches short isolated words which causes that students do not acquire an appropriate communicative language

Methodology: The methodologies implemented in classrooms are traditional and do not enhanced students learning. Teachers do not use varied strategies to teach English.
Fluency: This component is good in English teachers; however, within the development of the English class, fluency is not enough, due to the translation of some words or the speaking in the native tongue.

Time: It must be well used to develop all the activities that are planned.

Body language: Teachers do not use body language as a teaching strategy for foreign language, in order to avoid the translation of words.

Students output: Students output is not enough. It is clear that they need more tools and practice to make their performance more understandable.

English curriculum no cross: English curriculum is not articulated with other knowledge areas,

Low acquisition of English: children acquire a low level of English, since they need much permanent interaction with the language and methodologies to help improve their English.

Motivation: Motivation is an important factor influencing learning processes. In English classes students interested and motivated to learn because it is something new which calls attention to them.

Intimidation inhibition: The students sometimes prefer not to participate in class because of fears of making mistakes when pronouncing English or do not know how to say, this makes the involvement of children in English lower the level

Interference of L1: In English class students much of the class communicate in their mother tongue must use more English pronunciation because it is the only space they have to practice

TEACHERS

Vocabulary: The teacher uses limited English vocabulary. Besides, she teacher translates almost everything into her native tongue.
Fluency: When speaking, the teacher uses very well constructed phrases and sentences in English.

Grammar: The teacher often uses grammar to teach. She expresses that memory is needed to learn some topics. She uses many written activities in which children should practice grammar rules, vocabulary, structure of the English, etc.

Methodology: The teacher uses worksheets and the board to teach the topic. Some of the activities are done individually and others in group. Students can interact and share ideas with their partners. However, the teacher rarely generates activities like role plays, presentations or conversations, which promote the development of the linguistic competence in the students.

Time: It was evinced that the teacher uses English for short time and in that moment, the teacher only repeat and translate the sentences and words in English.

Body Language: During the English class, the body language is an essential part in the learning process and in the understanding of words. In the observed classes, the teacher rarely uses the body language. Classes are given in a traditional way, the teacher stays in only one place.

Students output: The output is the result of the input learning; in a second language it is an important process. It is observed that the students do not have an output process. They do not feel motivation for the communication.

Interference of L1: During class, the use of students’ native language goes to a 90%. This situation interfere in the learning process of the second language, due to the fact that students do not try to speak in English. In their class’ production the students use the L1.

Intimidation inhibition: Students do not feel confident to speak in a second language. In the general and focus observation, it was observed that the students do not have a real production in L2. They feel sky and afraid to make mistakes.
Motivation: Students do not feel motivated for learning a second language. During class, they do not want to be part of the activities. In addition, students feel no interest for the class or the learning.

Low acquisition of English: Since the students do not practice the language in the class, they have a low acquisition of the language. They do not feel truly motivated to learn English.

English curriculum no cross: In the school, the curriculum has no cross. Students do not have the possibility to practice the second language in the other context, different from the English class.

Institución Educativa La Presentación

TEACHERS

Vocabulary: The teacher speaks in Spanish as the students do not understand the activities or the commands in English.

Time: Only 40% of the class time is offered in English so the students cannot develop the necessary abilities to acquiring a second language. The teacher does not speak English all time, even though she might be using English for explaining the subject trough activities that promote the English uses.

Fluency: The teacher does not give an instruction clear and coherent enough in English. As a result, it is difficult for the students to follow the class. Furthermore, students’ language skills as listening, speaking and reading are not encouraged.

Methodology: Students are active and dynamic. Yet, their focus and attention level are low, which is a reason for the non-internalization of the concepts for a good development of the skills. Moreover, the English-speaking environment is not promoted by the teacher, so students are only worried about the grades, instead of the enrichment of their communication process.

Body language: An effective use of body language was not seen during the English classes. For this reason, the teacher cannot express accurately and effectively his intentions. The teacher’s body language do not act as a stimulating factor for the students.
Grammar: English classes are not clear regarding grammar procedures; they do not reflect an English teaching purpose and do not help to improve teaching effectiveness.

Instituto Universitario de Caldas

English class time: Although English classes have a certain time to start, teachers always finish this time earlier to continue with other subjects. Teachers do not consider this class important and they transmit it to students through classes that do not cultivate a habit of study for foreign language.

Fluency: While the teacher is speaking English, the students do not understand. As a result the teacher must speak in Spanish.
Vocabulary: Most of the class the teacher uses Spanish. All instructions and explanations are done in the native language and English is only used sometimes. Due to the below, students have difficulties differentiating an English class from a Spanish one.

Methodology: The activities and methodology are traditional. The teacher just uses a worksheet as methodology, which does not take into account the four skills to learn English. Consequently, activities are monotonous and do not motivate students to learn a second language.

Body language: The body language is constantly used by the teachers as it helps to transmit messages in English and Spanish and to make students understand the lesson easily.

STUDENTS

Students output: Students do not understand when the teacher speaks in English; they are embarrassed and afraid of speaking in English in front of their classmates or teacher.

Interference of L1: The use of L1 is constant. All the class and all instructions are given in Spanish. In addition, translation from Spanish to English is constant.

The table above illustrates the results of the English teachers’ questionnaire. It highlights the importance of constant contact with English, emphasizing the challenges faced by teachers when instructing large classes in English. Despite the necessity for such contact, teachers acknowledged the limitations posed by the number of students in their classrooms, making it difficult to conduct the entire lesson in English.

Teachers from Instituto Técnico Francisco José de Caldas

This is the analysis of the answers found after administering the questionnaire to two English teachers. First of all, it must be said that they have not been recently focused themselves on studying English. However, they state that outside the classrooms they have contact with the language through social networks. Besides, they express that it is not possible to teach all the class in English, because sometimes students do not understand. Their concerns are related to the development of English skills such as listening and speaking due to the fact that they do not live in the context. For doing so, the activities that they promote in the English class are interactive videos and dialogues.

One of the teachers said that a 10% of the class is spoken in English, while another teacher said that an 80% is spoken in English. According to the observations, most of the time, the class is given in Spanish, especially with what concerns to the explanations and instructions.
Teachers from SEMENOR

In the questionnaire that was conducted to English teachers, it was found that all of them have a teaching experience of 4 to 7 years; they are all bachelors in Modern Languages and they have had little contact with the English in the last 5 years. Referring to the use of English during the class, they speak 50% in English, arguing that students do not understand when they teach their classes fully in English. Additionally, hey claim that the most difficult skill to develop for them is speaking as they do not practice it.

Teachers from Liceo Infantil Niños 2000

Taking into account the answers given in the questionnaire, it can be evinced that the teacher’s English class, she does not use the target language because the students ask for the use of the Spanish, so she ends up in speaking in their mother tongue. It shows few strategies used in class to avoid the use of the Spanish; teacher know that students prefer in class is the use of activities using the technology, in the observations was not evidenced the use of these or the communicative activities.

Teachers from Liceo Aprender

In the questionnaire that was applied to one English teacher from high school, it was evident that her educational background in the English field is good. The teacher holds a Bachelor in Modern Languages and has some preparation through virtual courses. Regarding the speaking of English, she claims that she has the chance to speak in English but students do not understand what is being said and ask her to speak in Spanish; in fact, only a few of them understand the language and translate it for their partners in their native tongue. The below shows that the English language is rarely used in the English classroom

Teachers from La Presentación

The interview was conducted to an English teacher of the Institución Educativa La Presentación located in Salamina-Caldas in charge of the area of English in primary basic.
The interviewed teacher has a bachelor degree in Modern Languages acquired five years ago. Nonetheless, since she left her program, she does not have had any contact with additional preparation in English. Besides, it was noticed that the chances of carrying the whole class in English are minimal, due to the fact that students prefer their classes to be developed through activities such as crosswords, letters, songs and karaoke. The teacher stated in the interview that activities that she guides in English are always understood by her students. Yet, according to her, it is difficult to carry out role-plays. Concluding the interview the teacher assumed that the average of the explanations given in class in English is 50 percent.

Teachers from Instituto Universitario de Caldas

In the questionnaire it can be see that their former undergraduate program was in the same place, Caldas University. Teachers have a range between 4 and 1 year of getting the degree. They argue that they have contact with English outside their classes also they hold Master´s degrees in English, but one of the teachers answered that she does not have a chance to talk the whole class in English due to the number of students in her classroom.

Teachers pointed out during the survey that their students understand when they speak in English and one of them replied that reading comprehension is difficult to teach to children. The strategies used by teachers in their English classes are simulations and role play games, explaining in English between 50% and 80%

General analysis teachers questionnaire

The best area for training in a foreign language is in the educational context; for this reason the schools are potentiated for good results. Taking into account that as long as time goes by, the needs of the new world makes an urge to meet challenges that our mother tongue has not offered. Moreover, the addition of English as a foreign language in the curriculum of the Institutions can lead and promote social abilities and improve students’ lives; therefore, it might have a great impact in our society.
Students feel curious for learning new thing, especially a foreign language like English, of which they do not know much, but are eager to learn more and more. In fact, students show a great interest and preference towards the English class among the other subjects taught in a journey.

Conclusion

Analyzing the different problems emerged from the six institutions -SEMENOS, Instituto Técnico Francisco Jose de Caldas, Liceo Aprender, Liceo Infantil Niños 2000, Instituto Universitario de Caldas- it could be seen the lack of English use inside the classrooms, which affects mainly the students’ communicative skills. It is very important to promote the interaction between each other and acquisition of a language. For this reason there will be applied some workshops with the target population to develop and improve oral skills in the students.

RESEARCH QUESTION

What type of communicative tasks develop primary students’ oral skills?

GENERAL OBJECTIVE

To develop primary students English oral skills.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIVES

1. To awake the interest of the students towards the English learning.

2. To foster communicative tasks in the language classroom.

3. To promote oral participation in the English class.
THEORETICAL FRAMEWORK
The human being has the most incredible mental structure, which allows him to develop different abilities throughout life and live in interaction with the environment and with the agents that participate on it. One of the most amazing activities that our mental structure can do is to communicate with others through gestures, signals and of course, speech.

Before birth, the human being is exposed to a big variety of sensorial stimulus, which provides him with essential information for his biological and neurological development. This information enriches abundantly our learning; although, we have a perfect disposition to learn, it is necessary to get external information that completes our natural faculty of learning. In order to understand this, we can ask ourselves how human being reaches the development of different communicative abilities, how we acquire a language or what elements influence on doing so. This problem is an object studied for uncountable theoreticians that had studied how we acquire our native language (L1) and also how we use it referring to the physical, personal and social circumstances where those take place.

Vygotsky, one of the biggest scholars and psychologists, proposed the theory of human cultural and bio-social development, considering how the human being acquires the language and how he uses it like the best tool for thinking; and what items of the surroundings are involved on it. Considering the below, this author states:

"The language has a specific development with roots in the pre-linguistic communication and does not necessarily depend of the cognitive development, but the interaction with their environment. From this we can say that language is a function that is acquired through the relationship between the individual and its environment because, biologically, possesses the tools to create signs of verbal communication structures". (Vygotsky 1934)
For Vygotsky the human development is produced through different processes that allow the exchange of knowledge in a communicative and social–cultural–environment. We already know, as humans, we have an amazing biological disposition for learning a language. Nevertheless, the structure itself cannot do anything if it does not receive external stimulation or information. For this reason, he talks about the significance of interaction with the environment; given that, the surrounding gives information from which we take items that allow us to acquire the language from our context, at a certain stage of development. Therefore language acquisition depends considerably on what the environment gives to us.

On the other hand, it is very important to keep in mind other elements based on the meaningful process of the human being, as the reaching of high levels of thinking and the ability to express ideas, listen, understand and give sense to others’ expressions. Owing to this, Piaget–epistemologist, biologist and psychologist–contributed with a great quantity of studies about childhood and the intelligence’s theory. He though not only in the intrinsic need of the person to learn a language, but also on how to explain the relationship between thinking and language; and how the child gives meanings and significances to little items of the language from his/her first years of life.

"The source of knowledge, according to Piaget, is action, and the body acts as soon kicks in with the environment that embraces it." (Piaget, 1926). In this way, we can recognize that language is fully developed socially, since it gives many cognitive tools to the child’s thinking.

Therefore, the process of the second language acquisition cannot be excluded; considering that SLA is like a subconscious process developed by the necessity to communicate with others. There are many theories in the field of learning or the acquisition of foreign languages. One of those is the Natural Approach, which is about oral communication. Communication skills on this approach are based on acquiring knowledge, which means that it requires a comprehensive learning first, where it is not expected the student to answer in a fluent English. Students will start to produce simple words and phrases, where beginner students will be able to talk about themselves and their families.

Krashen (1995) argued that “The natural approach is designed to develop basic personal communication skills- both oral and written” he identifies the term Natural Approach as an approach to teach a language based on the use of language in communicative situations. Furthermore, he argues that there is a natural acquisition order of the native language which is known as the acquisition of grammatical structures. Referring to a second language it exists also. However the order and the processes are different.

Another theory about second language acquisition is the one of Universal grammar, which states that all human beings share similar fundamental structures language that are attributed to an innate process, Chomsky (1995) argues that “Universal grammar is usually defined as the “system of categories, mechanisms and constraints shared by all human languages and considered to be innate”. The learning process cannot be simply reduced to the development of a few stimuli, since when there is a new phrases, it is a combination of words which creates an infinite number of grammatical structures. The language is characterized by rules and principles which have an acquiring order that agree the level of the person, first time students are expected processing and learn structures in a logical order, as they learned their native tongue.

Through this author’s explanation, we can see that children learn these structures is because everyone has an innate knowledge that guides to develop the skills of the language. Chomsky (1995) says “(…) the idea that human languages, share some fundamental similarities, and that these are attributable to innate principles unique to language”.

Página 67
When people learn a language, they need to develop four skills to have a complete communication. The four skills are related in two ways: the direction of communication (listening – reading) and the method of communication (speaking- writing). The activities classroom must be directed to develop these four skills. In the project we will consider the oral skills. One of this is the oral skill, which is considered one of the most complicate skill to develop.

ORAL AND LISTENING SKILLS

P. Safont & M.C Campoy propose this on their book about oral skills: “Resources and Proposals for the Classroom”. In the chapter speaking in the Language Classroom, they state about oral skills “It is greatly conditioned by the time factor, it involves language produced spontaneously with false starts, repetitions, self-corrections and, under normal circumstances, it desappears, leaving no record but traces in memory” here the author indicates that in an oral production, interact certain factors and aspects that allow the message to be transmited. Another situation that the author highlights in his book that the message is transmited to a specific audience; here, the speaker needs to have a face-to face contact with the listener(s). Moreover, “Another important distinction is that it is generally directed at a specific audience in a face-to-face situation where the speaker can make use of the here-and-now and can get immediate feedback from the listener(s)”.

In the same chapter, P. Safont & M.C Campoy make emphasis on the importance of the speaking skills, which are a central process of our thinking. They mention that not in all cases when we know and learn a language, we can to speak it and present an example for this aspect “The speaking skill is so central to our thinking about language learning that when we refer to speaking a language we often mean knowing a language. For example, we might hear some one say “ask Olga to help you with your translation of Tolstoy- she speaks Russian””, here what is really meant is knowing the language and the speaking skill is not involved at all. Of course, you can know a language but not actually be able to speak it, just as you could know the rules for playing foosball but not be able to put that knowledge to practical use by playing the game yourself”.

Chastian (1998) quoted by these authors in the same book says “Speaking is using background and linguistic knowledge to create an oral message that will be meaningful for the intended audience”; it explains that speaking is a skill where the students need to use background, know about the area or topic that they also will speak and they need a linguistic knowledge, identify vocabulary and rulers to speak in this language, using this two aspects, the message sender can create and transmit a good message for the receiver.

Looking for different and effective ways to teach foreign languages where the students can improve their performance and became a more fluent in their speaking, several techniques have been created. One of the most recognized methods is the Total Physical Response (TPR) which was very novel in the 70’s, and today still has an impact in our ESL/EFL classroom.

According to Richards & Rodgers (1987), “Total Physical Response (TPR) is a language-teaching method built around the coordination of speech and action; it attempts to teach language through physical (motor) activity” (pág. 87). This method was developed by James Asher, who was professor of psychology at San Jose State University, California. In his work, Asher says that this method was designed to accelerate listening comprehension of a foreign language by having subjects giving a physical response when they heard a foreign utterance. From his experiments he describes the following example: “for example, if the Student heard in Russian the command, 'Stand, run to the table and pick up the green book," the Student immediately responded by standing, running to the table and picking up the green book” (Asher, 1968). He emphasizes the relationship between actions and works. This relationship promotes the language comprehension

Asher (1968) started to study this situation in class because he considered that it was unrealistic to expect fluency in listening, speaking, reading and writing with only an hour per day of training. In fact, he considered that a more effective strategy could be to concentrate the students only on one skill, especially in the first stage of foreign language training. (Asher, 1968, pág. 37). The skill he recommend was listening comprehension. “If the student achieves a high level of listening fluency, then the transition to speaking may be graceful and non-stressful” (Asher, 1968). Thus, the main objective of Total Physical Response - T.P.R- is to teach oral proficiency at a beginning level (Richards & Rodgers, 1987); for this reason, it is so important in the first levels to learn a language in this case English, promote in class listening and speaking skills

This method is based on how children acquired their native tongue. The British Council (2002) posted an article about T.P.R and mentioned how parents have 'body-language conversations' with their children, “(…) the parent instructs and the child physically responds to this. The parent says, "Look at mummy" or "Give me the ball" and the child does so. These conversations continue for many months before the child actually starts to speak itself. Even though it can't speak during this time, the child is taking in all of the language; the sounds and the patterns”. TPR attempts to mirror this effect in the language classroom.

Nonetheless, it is also important to take into account the teacher’s and learner’s role, as Richards & Rodgers (1987) who describe them as:

Teacher roles
The teacher plays an active and direct role in Total Physical Response "The instructor is the director of a stage play in which the students are the actors". It is the teacher who decides what to teach, who models and presents the new materials, and who selects supporting materials for classroom use. The teacher is encouraged to be well prepared and well organized so that the lesson flows smoothly and predictably. Asher recommends detailed lesson plans: "It is wise to write out the exact utterances you will be using and especially the novel commands because the action is so fast-moving there is usually not time for you to create spontaneously" (Asher, 1977 in Richards & Rodgers (1987)

Learner roles

In Total Physical Response, learners have the primary roles of listening and performing. They listen attentively and respond physically to the commands given by the teacher. Learners are required to respond both individually and collectively. They have little influence over the content of learning, since content is determined by the teacher, who must follow the imperative-based format for lessons. Learners are also expected to recognize and respond to novel combinations of previously taught items.

Besides, learners are required to produce novel combinations on their own. Learners monitor and evaluate their own progress. They are encouraged to speak when they feel ready to do it - that is, when a sufficient basis in the language has been internalized (Richards & Rodgers, 1987, pág. 93).

Referring to this, there are some recommendations from the specialized web page Proliteracy (s.f):

Since you will be modeling the action as you speak, it will be especially important to use gestures and facial expressions. With beginner students, first teach commands that call for simple body movements and no props: stand up, sit down, walk, and turn around. Starting with such basic commands gives students a welcome feeling of accomplishment and helps them become comfortable with TPR right away. Students can go on to more advanced TPR activities in which they interact with props and people in the learning environment. Examples of commands to use at this stage are touch the, point to, pick up, put down, and give me. These are especially useful for teaching both the names of objects in pictures and of objects that are in the immediate environment, some of which may be out of reach

TPR can be used for the following purposes:

- To review and reinforce vocabulary you have already taught using non-TPR methods
- To have missed previous lessons in which new material was introduced
- To provide students with an enjoyable, relaxing break during a lesson

Communicative approach

Communicative Approach has its origins in both, linguistics and in language teaching as a reaction against the view of language as a set of structures (Plocková, 2010). Before, language teachers were mainly interested in grammatical correctness: the form rather than the meaning. In fact, communication does not imply just composing correct sentences but using them to make statements of different kinds, to describe, to record, to classify and so on, or to ask questions, to make requests, to give orders. Plocková (2010) describes how it had been found that knowing grammar rules does not enable students to use the language for communicative purposes sufficiently.

Given that, the communicative approach is, perhaps, the most used nowadays in our classrooms; Teachers have realized the importance of daily activities and global tendencies like traveling, studying abroad and knowing about other cultures, as in these situations is where students will use the language. Thus, make that people understand us is sometimes the most important goal in many situations of our lives.

Furthermore, according to Richards (2006, pág. 3), communicative competence includes the following aspects of language knowledge:

- Knowing how to use language for a range of different purposes and functions
- Knowing how to vary our use of language according to the setting and the participants (e.g., knowing when to use formal and informal speech or when to use language appropriately for written as opposed to spoken communication)
- Knowing how to produce and understand different types of texts (e.g., narratives, reports, interviews, conversations)
- Knowing how to maintain communication despite having limitations in one’s language knowledge (e.g., through using different kinds of communication strategies)

Communicative approach with children

There are many ways of promoting the participation and interaction of students. Center for Applied Linguistics (s.f) describes some tips for achieving this purpose as follows: Keep teacher talk to a minimum. It is explained as much as possible by demonstrating the process, explaining in different ways, and repeating. Don not worry if not every learner understands every part of an activity. Move on when the majority of the learners get the idea, and then circulate and help as needed—unobtrusively. One way to gauge the success of a class for English language learners is to observe how much or how little the students are depending on the teacher. The more learners are working independently, in pairs, or in small groups, the more successful the class is. Besides, it is important to have fun, design communicative activities to be lively and interactive. This could make possible that learners feel more comfortable. An active, cooperative class is a class where a great deal of learning—social, cultural, and linguistic—is evident. (Center for Applied Linguistics, s.f.) There are some important elements for learning to take place in a class, like a good body language, audio visual tools, correct use of vocabulary and pronunciation. The interaction and approach with the students is an important factor for acquisition of the language

Developing oral skills through communicative tasks

In our context, foreign languages’ learners usually do not like to speak the L2 and most of the time they show a passive attitude in class. Training in oral skills let them communicate and interact in a meaningful and fruitful form, that is, exchanging information, negotiating meaning, supporting ideas, facing oral defenses, is a way to motivate students to see the foreign language as a vehicle for social interaction.

Humans are social beings who are in continuous communication and interaction with each other. Seeing that, it is important to foster situations in which learners can face real communication in a foreign language. An argument that supports this view is found in Bygate, who states: “Our learners often need to be able to speak with confidence in order to carry out many of their most basic transactions. It is the skill by which they are most frequently judged, and through which they make or lose friends.” (1987. p.1)
“In interaction students can use all they possess of the language, all they have learned or casually absorbed in real life exchanges” (Rivers, quoted in Brown, 1994, p.159). This quote addresses the importance of real interaction, which gives the learners the opportunity to demonstrate what they can do in the foreign language. Interaction is the basis of human communication and all the elements of communicative and interactive competence -grammar, discourse, sociolinguistics, and pragmatics- are involved in human interaction. They must work together for successful communication to take place.

On the other hand, it is important to create a positive environment to encourage the learners’ interaction. As such, they can express their ideas, feelings and opinions without feeling afraid of making mistakes. Students can also carry out communicative tasks in an effective way. Willis (1996) states that creating a low stress atmosphere and using the language for real purposes are ways to get meaningful communication and through interaction learners have the chance to acquire discourse skills. Willis also highlights the essential conditions for effective language learning, such as exposure, use, and motivation. With this view of language, task-based learning offers many advantages in the designing of communicative activities and the development and improvement of oral skills. Nunan (1991. p.279) says that task-based learning views the learning process as a set of communicative tasks that are directly linked to the curricular goals they serve. Task-based teaching involves an approach where communicative tasks are important because students need to engage in interactions inside and outside the classrooms.

This view changes the approach of designing tasks to be developed in the classroom. It means, teachers and students must be engaged in tasks, which involves meaningful contexts where learners use the foreign language in a real form not only for a grade but for their daily life. Task-based learning lets the students develop a set of discourse strategies such as opening and closing conversation, introducing a topic, etc. Moreover, learners have the opportunity to interact in different situations, in different groups and audiences.

- The volunteer and the team will read the answers aloud. If they match, the team wins a point.
- The teacher will play again with the other team.
- The team with the most points at the end wins.

PRODUCTION

- The students will play a conversation created by themselves, they are to imagine that they are at the supermarket.
